Leading Leaders is the third book in the trilogy on church leadership produced by Aubrey Malphurs (published by Baker Books in 2005), professor at Dallas Theological Seminary. He claims in his introduction that "Leading Leaders presents a new paradigm for board leadership" (8). In essence it is the application of principles developed by John Carver for nonprofit governing boards, but Malphurs hastens to add that "most important, this book is based on Scripture" (8).

Empowerment sounds great, but leadership is principally about the human dimension so nothing is always simple. Embracing empowerment may run counter to the personality of some leaders. Once you are in charge of a team or an organization you may believe that your presence and your decisions alone are responsible for its success.
