Carefully pour a properly measured charge of black powder into the chamber closest to the loading cutout. Repeat for each chamber. Use an individual powder measure. Do not pour powder from a large powder flask or can. The exact amount of powder will vary depending on the type of gun. For a .36, use 12 grains of powder.

Black powder is very volatile and subject to ignition from sparks or even static electricity, so you want to deal with the smallest amounts possible while loading your rifle. Pyrodex is less sensitive and less apt to absorb moisture. It's also easier to clean and easier to store safely. For beginners I highly recommend Pyrodex products.

Pyrodex is used on the basis of equivalent black powder volume not weight. Load the same amount of Pyrodex powder height into your case as you would for black powder. DO NOT load Pyrodex using equal scale weight of black powder. Use ONLY the RS or Ctg. grade not the P grade of Pyrodex in BP rifle cases.
