Four classmates in Gdansk in 1957 swear to keep secret the events that took place in a hollow behind the nearby firing range one mysterious afternoon

In Gdansk, three boys and a girl fall under the spell of a mysterious classmate, David Weiser. Weiser and the girl vanish, leaving the three other boys to explain to the authorities. "Tender, beautifully written and puzzling" (New York Times Book Review). Translated by Michael Kandel. A Helen and Kurt Wolff Book. Harvest in Translation series

The idea for the book came about while I was working abroad on a theater show, with a fair bit of downtime. Before leaving, I'd been helping our son, Arlen, as he made first contact with a few instruments: keyboards and synthesizers, guitar, and a variety of tuned percussion instruments. It did not always go well. His intense love of music was matched by an equally intense desire for immediate results. This combination often led to a considerable amount of frustration. To help Arlen cope with this frustration, I decided to write a short rhyming story that would be similar in many ways to those found in his favorite picture books. My initial vision was for the book to encourage practice and sticktoitiveness, enshrining the many virtues of delayed gratification. Mercifully, I came to my senses and abandoned that idea as utter nonsense. It dawned on me that our boy's innocence and earnestness fueled a kind of rock power, that unnamed spark of creative joy that many of us in the music industry have chased in practice spaces and recording studios for decades. It's the very thing that makes a kid, a kid. Our five-year-old boy is Thoreau's "childlike mirthfulness" come to life. He dances like there's no one watching; he doesn't know any other way. He sings with abandon, and sometimes, he roars. In the end, I thought that if he learns something from the book, wonderful, but above all else, I wanted this book to help ensure that he never forgets how to roar.

Stories from a Polish writer, mixing magic and realism. In Uncle Henryk, a boy and his uncle, lost in a snowstorm, come across a town where conflicts are settled by cockfights. In The Table, a wife wants it thrown out the house because it once belonged to a German, while her husband defends the owner as a brave individual who fought the Nazis.

These poems probe today's world and its challenge to traditional values. In a modern but accessible style, they develop a perspective based on the author's family history as holocaust survivors.

Explores the “ star demons ” and their correspondences in magic and astrology as revealed in the medieval grimoires and classical esoteric texts. Stellas Daemonum offers an in-depth analysis of the spirits that appear in several late medieval and early modern grimoires. The book unravels these texts ’ mythical, etymological, magical, and religious dimensions and, most importantly, draws out their astrological correspondences. The author shows how the spirit entities featured in these goetic grimoires can be best understood by studying the celestial nature apparent in the ancient concept of the daimon and through an extensive study of ninety-three of the spirits featured in the medieval and Renaissance texts. The book also explores how Judeo-Christian traditions ultimately “ demonized ” such expressions due to their polytheistic roots and made punishable by death any attempts to reconnect with them. The nature of this work is strongly influenced by the author ’ s own magical practices, but its presentation does not resort to subjective or personal experiences, having a style that is more formal and research-based.
