~~Artists' Brains Have More 'Grey Matter' Than The Rest Of Ours, Study Finds. By Katherine Brooks. You might be guilty of categorizing artists as "right-brained" thinkers who lean on that particular hemisphere of the brain for creativity. But a new study published last month claims overall brain "structure" is a better distinguishing factor between artists and their non-artist counterparts.~~

Palmer has developed a form of sculpture which involves mapping on multiple sheets of glass. Each sheet 'maps' a section of the brain, using information from magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scans, which the artist underwent at University College London. Brought together, the layered 'maps' create a 3D image which appears to float in a glass chamber, and which can only be perceived from certain angles, disappearing when the work is viewed from the side.
